Two men attempted to show a burst of speed by way of horse locomotion on lower Washington street yesterday afternoon, but didn't figure on the snarls of the electric car track. The track caught them and tipped the two men onto hard ground, and the horse, released from all guidance, took a few wild jumps and then settled down into a lunge as it made for home, which was Papin's stable in the rear of the City Hotel. The sleigh, which had been tipped on its side, righted itself at the turn into the City Hotel, and thus the horse drove into the stable in fully as good style as it would have if the two men had been driving.
